Patrick Robinson

Patrick Robinson has worked in Suffolk for over twenty years as an ecologist for the organisation now known as Natural England. He began his career with Hampshire County Council working on the Ancient Woodland Inventory before moving and continuing the role with the Nature Conservancy Council, and then to Kent working on the damage resulting from the Great Storm of 1987. He became the officer responsible for Sites of Special Scientific Interest in Greater London before moving to Suffolk where he is responsible for the management of sites dealing with a range of habitats and geology but specialises in woodlands and fens.
